*Contract — Public policy — Agreement and letter of guarantee made to stifle prosecution
— Whether agreement was void as being against public policy — Contracts Act 1950 ss 24 & 25*

Both defendants were at all material times directors of two companies, Moveland Properties Sdn Bhd ('Moveland Properties') and another company. In 1984, the plaintiff, a building contractor entered into a contract with each of the two companies separately for the construction in each case of ten units of three-storey buildings and in both contracts, the second defendant signed for both companies, though the first defendant appeared to have stage-managed them. At the signing of the contract with Moveland Properties, its full name was not used in the contract but a shorter name was used, viz 'Moveland Sdn Bhd', with the word 'Properties' from the full name of Moveland Properties missing therefrom. This missing word was the crucial factor in this case. Towards the end of 1986, the two companies were lagging behind in payment and the plaintiff filed two separate civil suits against the companies, with 'Moveland Sdn Bhd' cited in one of the two actions, as the defendant. In early 1987, a search was made by the plaintiff at the registry of companies and the plaintiff found there was no company registered as 'Moveland Sdn Bhd'. The plaintiff thought both the defendants had deceived it by making it sign a contract with a non-existing company. The plaintiff then lodged a police report.

Meetings and negotiations between the defendants and the plaintiff to mediate a settlement of the plaintiff's claims in the two civil suits were held, culminating in the signing of two documents, one of which the defendants signed as directors of the companies admitting that they owed the plaintiff RM1.9m ('the companies' agreement') and the other document being in the form of a letter, in which both defendants, jointly and severally guaranteed the plaintiff that they would settle the liabilities, etc in the companies' agreement ('the letter of guarantee'). Only about RM140,000 was paid after the above documents were signed to account of RM1.9m undertaken by both defendants to be paid and again the present action herein was filed to recover the balance. The plaintiff claimed the balance from both defendants on the basis of the letter of guarantee. The defendants resisted by alleging in the defence two matters: first, duress and

- A secondly, that the letter of guarantee was void as being illegal because the consideration for it was illegal or against public policy. The learned trial judge gave judgment for the plaintiff. The defendants have appealed.
- B Held, dismissing the appeal:
- (1) The trial judge was correct in holding that there was no evidence of duress.
- (2) On the second defence of illegal consideration or consideration being against public policy however, one of the considerations for the agreements was expressly stated to be that the plaintiff would withdraw the charge against the defendants as detailed in the police report. Such contracts to stifle prosecution are unlawful because their consideration or object is against public policy and they are caught by the second limb of s 24(e) of the Contracts Act 1950 ('the Act').

D [Bahasa Malaysia summary

- Kedua-dua defendan pada masa yang penting itu merupakan pengarah dua buah syarikat, Moveland Properties Sdn Bhd ('Moveland Properties') dan sebuah syarikat yang lain. Dalam tahun 1984, plaintiff, seorang kontraktor pembinaan telah mengikat perjanjian yang berasingan dengan kedua-dua buah syarikat itu untuk membina sepuluh unit bangunan tiga tingkat dan di dalam kedua-dua kontrak itu, defendan kedua telah menandatangani bagi pihak kedua-dua buah syarikat itu, walaupun defendan yang pertama mendalangi mereka. Apabila kontrak dengan Moveland Properties ditandatangani, nama penuhnya tidak digunakan di dalam kontrak itu tetapi nama yang lebih pendek digunakan, iaitu 'Moveland Sdn Bhd', dengan perkataan 'Properties' ditinggalkan dari nama penuhnya. Perkataan yang tertinggal itu merupakan faktor penting di dalam kes ini. Pada penghujung tahun 1986, kedua-dua syarikat itu ketinggalan dalam bayaran mereka dan plaintiff telah memfailkan dua guaman sivil yang berasingan terhadap kedua-dua syarikat itu, dengan 'Moveland Sdn Bhd' sebagai defendan di dalam salah satu daripada guaman itu. Pada awal tahun 1987, suatu usaha mencari telah dibuat oleh plaintiff di pejabat pendaftaran syarikat dan plaintiff telah mendapati bahawa tidak terdapat syarikat yang didaftarkan sebagai 'Moveland Sdn Bhd'. Plaintiff telah menyangka bahawa kedua-dua defendan telah menipunya supaya mengikat perjanjian dengan syarikat yang tidak wujud. Plaintiff kemudiannya telah membuat laporan polis.
- E

- G
- H

- Perjumpaan dan rundingan di antara defendan dan plaintiff untuk mencapai persetujuan tentang tuntutan plaintiff di dalam kedua-dua guaman sivil itu telah diadakan, dan dua dokumen telah ditandatangani, defendan menandatangani satu daripadanya sebagai pengarah syarikat itu dan mengaku bahawa mereka menghutang plaintiff sebanyak RM1.9m ('perjanjian syarikat itu') dan dokumen kedua berbentuk surat, dimana kedua-dua defendan, bersesama dan berasingan
- I

menjamin kepada plaintif, di dalam perjanjian syarikat itu ('surat jaminan itu'), bahawa mereka akan menyelesaikan liabiliti itu, dan sebagainya. Hanya sebanyak RM140,000 dibayar selepas dokumen-dokumen tersebut ditandatangani untuk menjelaskan RM1.9m yang kedua-dua defendan berjanji akan membayar dan guaman ini telah difailkan untuk mendapat balik bakinya. Plaintif menuntut baki daripada kedua-dua defendan atas dasar surat jaminan itu. Defendan telah menentang tuntutan itu dan berhujah dalam pembelaan mereka bahawa: pertama, dures dan keduanya, bahawa surat jaminan itu adalah tidak sah kerana menyalahi undang-undang dan balasan baginya adalah menyalahi undang-undang atau menentang polisi awam. Hakim perbicaraan yang arif telah memberi keputusan memihak kepada plaintif. Defendan telah membuat rayuan.

Diputuskan, menolak rayuan itu:

- (1) Hakim perbicaraan betul apabila membuat keputusan bahawa tidak terdapat bukti dures.
- (2) Akan tetapi, atas pembelaan kedua mengenai balasan yang menyalahi undang-undang atau balasan yang menentang polisi awam, satu daripada balasan untuk perjanjian itu menyatakan bahawa plaintif akan menarik balik tuduhan terhadap defendan sebagai yang dinyatakan di dalam laporan polis. Kontrak sedemikian yang bertujuan menyekat pendakwaan adalah menyalahi undang-undang kerana mereka jatuh di bawah cabang kedua s 24(e) Akta Kontrak 1950 ('Akta itu').]

Peh Swee Chin SCJ (delivering the grounds of judgment of the court): Departing as we did, from the views held by the learned trial judge in the instant case, while at the same time we were struck by the dearth of local reported cases on the legal points involved, we felt we ought to give our reasons in writing.

A The factual background may be compendiously stated as follows. Both defendants were at all material times directors of two companies, viz Moveland Properties Sdn Bhd ('Moveland Properties') and another company called Rotraco Sdn Bhd ('Rotraco'). The first defendant was at all material times also an architect, being at the same time a partner in a firm of architects.

B In 1984, the plaintiff, a building contractor entered into a contract with each of the two companies separately for the construction in each case of ten units of three-storey buildings in the Batu Caves area and in both contracts, the second defendant had signed for both companies, though the first defendant appeared to have stage-managed them.

C At the signing of the contract with Moveland Properties, ie Moveland Properties Sdn Bhd, its full name was not used in the contract but a shorter name was used, viz 'Moveland Sdn Bhd', with the word 'Properties' from the full name of Moveland Properties missing therefrom. This missing word was the crucial factor in this case.

D Towards the end of 1986, the two companies were lagging behind in payment according to the tenor of certificates of payment, the plaintiff then filed two separate civil suits against the companies respectively, being Kuala Lumpur High Court Civil Suits T23-257-86 and T23-264-86 respectively, with 'Moveland Sdn Bhd' cited in one of the two actions, as the defendant.

E In early 1987, a search was made by the plaintiff at the registry of companies and the plaintiff found there was no company registered as 'Moveland Sdn Bhd'. The plaintiff thought both the defendants had deceived it by making it sign a contract with a non-existing company. The plaintiff then lodged a report to the police to the same effect apparently but it was not produced in evidence. What action, if any, taken by the police was neither in evidence.

F Two letters were also written in 1987 pursuant to such discovery by the plaintiff to the president of the board of architects of Malaysia and as stated by PW1, a director of the plaintiff in evidence thus: 'The main ground of complaint was that D1 was architect as well as developer for these works'. 'D1' refers to the first defendant.

G Both the police report and the letters of complaint to the board of architects of Malaysia were not produced by the plaintiff, understandably, for the statement of defence filed by the defendants had pleaded illegality arising out of withdrawal of the complaints both to the board and the police, with such withdrawal as consideration for the contract of guarantee signed by both defendants and for which they were being sued. The defendants did not produce them if they had them, because in part, apparently they elected not to call any evidence at the end of the plaintiff's case and preferred to make a submission on the case there.

H To revert to some sort of chronology of our narrative, one Mr Terence Oh, apparently at the request of the first defendant arranged for meetings and negotiations between the defendants and the plaintiff to mediate a settlement of the plaintiff's claims in the two civil suits, culminating in the signing of two documents on the same date, one a fairly elaborate agreement in the form of a letter addressed to both defendants and signed by two directors of the plaintiff (one of whom was PW1) with an acknowledgement at the foot of the letter signed by both defendants as directors on behalf of Moveland Properties and Rotraco respectively, agreeing and undertaking to abide by the contents of the letter (hereinafter called the companies' agreement). The other document was also in the form of a letter addressed to the plaintiff in which both defendants, jointly and severally guaranteed the plaintiff that they would settle liabilities, etc in the companies' agreement (this second document is hereinafter called the letter of guarantee). Both documents are set out below for ease of reference; first the companies' agreement, followed by the letter of guarantee, and it will be observed that at that time the plaintiff had not changed its name to the present one, and still used its old name of 'Pembinaan Muncul Hebat Sdn Bhd':

Only about RM140,000 was paid after the above documents were signed to account of RM1.9m undertaken by both defendants to be paid and again the present action herein was filed to recover the balance.

In the suit herein, the plaintiff claimed the balance of RM1.76m from both defendants on the basis of the letter of guarantee for all practical purposes, as guarantors. The defendants resisted by alleging in the defence two matters: first, duress, which we took them, to mean 'coercion' under our own Contracts Act 1950 and secondly, that the letter of guarantee was void as being illegal because the consideration for it was illegal or against public policy.

At the end of the plaintiff's case, the defendants elected not to call evidence as they were entitled to do so and both parties thereupon made their submissions.

The learned trial judge gave judgment for the plaintiff as prayed and against that judgment, the defendants appealed.

The learned judge dealt with the issue of duress for which he found no evidence and rejected it, and with this we entirely agreed.

However, in the second defence of illegal consideration or consideration being against public policy in connection with the letter of guarantee, the learned trial judge held that the substantial consideration of the companies' agreement and the letter of guarantee was the 'composition' of money owing by the two companies to the plaintiff and the 'mutual' agreement to withdraw all claims against each other and to quote: "That consideration's perfectly legal". By composition we presumed his Lordship meant a settlement.

The learned trial judge remarked on the failure of defence to specify the particular subsection of s 24 of the Contracts Act 1950 apart from citing

A s 24 and illustration (h) to s 24. For ease of reference, s 24 and illustration (h) to s 24 and s 25 of the Contracts Act 1950, ('the Act') are set out below:

24 The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless—

- B (a) it is forbidden by a law;
(b) it is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat any law;
(c) it is fraudulent;
(d) it involves or implies injury to the person or property of another; or
(e) the court regards it as immoral, or opposed to public policy.

In each of the above cases, the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void.

- (h) A promise B to drop a prosecution which he has instituted against B for robbery, and B promises to restore the value of the things taken. The agreement is void, as its object is unlawful.

- 25 If any part of a single consideration for one or more objects, or any one or any part of any one of several considerations for a single object, is unlawful, the agreement is void.

E

The learned trial judge dealt with illustration (h) and was of the view that to sustain such a defence as in illustration (h) there must at least be a threat of continuing a prosecution which a plaintiff had initiated and there was none and that, to quote: 'In the absence of an ongoing prosecution where the primary motive of the parties is to stifle the prosecution, I know of no law or policy which stipulates these parties should not privately settle their differences. Indeed the policy of the law has always been to encourage reasonable settlements.' And the learned trial judge further observed: 'It is to be noted cheating is not an offence which needs to be reported under s 13(i)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code (FMS Cap 6).'

F

We regret we were unable to agree with the views of the learned trial judge stated above.

G

The defence raised by the defendants was, without doubt, the well-known defence, known as an agreement to stifle prosecution and no court will enforce such an agreement for it should be apparent that such agreement, if allowed to be enforced, could mean that the law of freedom to contract has been abused for purpose of extortion where the person accused is innocent, or where he is guilty, it has been abused for making a trade of a crime.

H

In our opinion, the principles applicable to our instant case were incidentally and carefully dealt with in an Indian Supreme Court case in Ouseph Poulo v Catholic Union Bank,<sup>1</sup> and the Privy Council's Indian appeal of Kamini Kumar Basu v Birendra Nath Basu,<sup>2</sup> and there is no need to quote in extenso passages from them, apart from saying that we share the views expressed therein.

I

Such contracts to stifle prosecution are unlawful because their consideration or object is against public policy and they are caught by the second limb of s 24(e) of the Act.

It is to be emphasized that for Malaysia and as in India it is only when the stifling of prosecution relates to non-compoundable offences as specified in our Penal Code (FMS Cap 45), that our courts consider such agreements as void for being unlawful under s 24 of the Act. When they refer to compoundable offences or offences which are compoundable with the leave of the court, such contracts would not be void and would then be indeed encouraged by the courts as stated by the learned trial judge. The reliance by the learned trial judge on the fact that the offence of cheating need not be reported to the police under the Criminal Procedure Code (FMS Cap 6) would appear to us to be of no avail.

Our courts must, as stated in Ouseph Poulo,<sup>1</sup> inevitably inquire: 'Did one party to the transaction make his promise in exchange or part exchange of promise of the other not to prosecute or continue prosecuting?' This means also, be it noted that the promise not to prosecute need not be a sole promise or a substantial one, it is sufficient if it is merely a part of the promise or one of the promises of the promisee. If it is, it is a sufficiently prohibited consideration or object for the ensuing consequence of the unenforceability of the whole agreement. This inevitable enquiry seems to dovetail with s 25 of the Act set out above. If that be so, it will be seen that the genuineness or reality of a debt would be irrelevant if an agreement to stifle prosecution is part of the consideration for payment of a debt. Please see also Bhawanipur Banking Corp v Durgesh Nandini.<sup>3</sup>

We also share the same view expressed to the effect in Kamini<sup>2</sup> that a pending prosecution need not at all be a prerequisite for impugning such an agreement to stifle prosecution and we did not find therefore the contrary view of the learned trial judge acceptable.

It is of course envisaged that, more often than not, such impugned object or consideration is not stated in the agreement expressly, but sometimes a necessary inference can be drawn from the evidence, it will then be sufficient. Thus a pending prosecution in court could lend weight to the inference sought to be established. A pending prosecution is a mere matter of weight of evidence.

Reverting to our instant case, the companies' agreement and the letter of guarantee made on the same day by both sides in the case would have to be read together, as much as both documents had to be and were in fact cited in the statement of claim of the plaintiff. Obviously, the consideration for supporting the letter of guarantee would have to come from the companies' agreement otherwise the letter of guarantee would ex facie be starkly bare of any consideration. Looking at the companies' agreement, it would be plain to all and sundry that one of the considerations for the defendants to admit liability and to undertake to pay off the indebtedness by instalments, etc mentioned therein was expressly stated by the plaintiff as: 'We shall withdraw our charges against you as detailed in the police report dated 25 March 1987'. This, among the other considerations, would taint the whole of the companies' agreement, and consequently the letter of guarantee, for the promise was clearly one of promise not to prosecute or not to continue any prosecution.

The 'charges' referred to above to be withdrawn could be irresistibly those related to cheating as appeared from the evidence of PW1, the

A director of the plaintiff company that he had lodged the report to the police for he was under the impression that the defendants had made him enter into an agreement with a non-existent company. This evidence from the witness must have come out with considerable reluctance for he must be aware of the defence of the defendants described above, though so little but yet more than enough was said.

B Cheating under the Penal Code (FMS Cap 45) is non-compoundable with no discretion to the court to grant leave to compound the same, and to stifle prosecution for cheating therefore is certainly a mischief which s 24 of the Act also provides for.

C We therefore allowed the appeal by dismissing the claims of the plaintiff with costs here and below to the defendants, and further ordered that the deposit in court be refunded to the defendants/appellants to account of taxed costs.

Appeal dismissed.
